Headwaters at the Comal to host public preview day

From Staff Reports Dec 8, 2017

The Headwaters at the Comal is holding a preview day open to the public Saturday, Dec. 9.

The day will give the community the chance to explore the Headwaters project on their own and free of charge.

“We’re keeping it pretty casual because it’s the first time that we’ve been open,” Assistant Manager of the Headwaters at the Comal Lauren Stract said. “We’re introducing people to the process of phase one and when it’s begun.”

She also noted that those who wish to attend on Saturday should wear comfortable footwear.

Short talks will be held throughout the day to introduce visitors to the headwaters plan.

Those are schedule at 10:15 a.m., 11:15 a.m., 12:15 p.m., and 1:15 p.m.

In addition, archeologists will be on site to discuss their findings in the area.

Stract said there won’t be any major programming at the Headwaters until the spring, when archeological work will commence.

Any major construction is still a few years out.
